As to the Primary.

We suppose it is nigh on to treason to advocate the abolishing of primaries yet we are convinced that the primary method does not yield the best government, because it does not secure the best officers.
As has been remarked by some one, it makes politics a fight for persons instead of for principles.
There can be no dispute that it makes corruption more wide spread than does the convention system. The convention is in accord with our fundamental plans of government. The primary is an unnecessary and inordinate expense, especially when it is state wide. Even in our own county all have seen boys under voting age bought and thus caused to commit two crimes at once. It is a hap-hazard way of selecting candidates and affords no opportunity for an intelligent review of the men or a distribution of the candidates throughout the district they are to serve. We know this is not orthodox but it is the truth and had as well be told. The larger the territory covered the less feasible it becomes and the expenses increase to that degree that only wealthy men can contest for the offices, especially in the state. We are convinced that if the primary law was off the statute book it would not soon be put on again. This, of course, is our individual view and we are not expressing it as a partisan, but in the interest of better government, better officers and better service in office. The primary puts a premium on perjury and in most instances gives the party a minority candidate. At any rate we believe it would be good for all to try the convention again at least for a few years.—Moberly Democrat.

Alabama's Returning Sanity.

Alabama's primary has done more than give a set-back to statewide prohibition. It has called a halt on the anticorporation folly which has raged there, as well as in some of the other southern states and in a few of those of the west in recent years. The man who has carried the state for the Democratic nomination for governor, Emmet O'Neal, is a local option advocate. He has overwhelmingly beaten Mallory, the state-wide liquor exclusionist.
O'Neal stands also for fair treatment for the railways and the other corporations.
Nine states have state-wide prohibition. Three of these—Maine, Kansas and North Dakota—are northern states. The others—North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Oklahoma—are southern states.
Alabama is one of the states which became "dry" on January 1st, 1909. After an experience of a little over a year that state has turned against the exclusionists, and intends to let the counties and the big towns deal with the liquor issue independently.
In the coming election public sentiment is expected to express itself concretely on this question, with the result that the old sane method of home rule for the various communities in the state will be adopted anew. It is believed that Mississippi and North Carolina, both of which also began the state-wide experiment at the beginning of 1909, will return to local option at an early day. In Tennessee, which shut out the liquor traffic, in theory, on July 1st, 1909, the experiment is likewise a failure.
The most important result of the Alabama primary, however, is the defeat of the general scheme of fanaticism and proscription for which Gov. Comer has stood. At the head of the demagogues of his state, Comer has hampered the big corporations there, has inflicted millions of dollars of damage on the people of the state, and has given aid and comfort to the agitators and fanatics who have had a free hand in running the affairs of several of the southern commonwealths in recent times.
The issue of liberalism and sanity has gone so far in Alabama that it enters into the primaries for the selection of all sorts of officials, from members of the Legislature and Governor up to members of the Senate and House of Representatives. Apparently, the liberals are making a clean sweep of the state. The setback for prohibition in Alabama, which has tried that policy, ought to have a good deal of influence in Missouri, which has not tried it, but in which there is a movement in its favor.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
